There's also a great deal of information on the seller so you can research to make sure that other people have been happy with this person. You should check to see that the seller has sold laptops for awhile and that the seller has good positive feedback. If a person's feedback is below 95%, you may want to look for a different seller to do business with. Make sure to ask questions. You are able to send messages to the seller to make sure that the laptop you want to purchase is in good shape. The third key is to look at online classified ads for refurbished laptop computers. Make sure to get information about the specifications of the computer so that you can compare with other laptops that you may see on eBay. Once again, do not be afraid to ask questions to the sellers. Try to make sure that the sellers are reputable and see they have a website which you can take time to check out. This will allow you to become comfortable with the fact that the person is not a scam artist and is a real and reputable seller. Finally, see if the computer which you are purchasing comes with any type of warranty. You want to give yourself protection to know that if anything does go wrong, you have a plan in place to take care of it. If you're going to spend money (at least several hundred dollars), you do not want to be out that money if something happens within the first couple weeks of having a laptop. Refurbished laptops often will have a warranty with them if you are looking at a new one. Used computers may still have a warranty but it could be voided if the original seller gets rid of the item. You want to see what type of clauses are within the warranty to make sure that your covered if you buy that particular laptop.
